“ My mother was a strong and decent woman who spent most of her life on the farm homesteaded by her great grandfather. It was a special place at the end of a gravel road three miles from a town of 250 people. As an only child, she took care of her parents and then took care of my father, my brother and me. She had always wanted to be a teacher but, instead, made peace with being a farm housewife. One of her proudest moments as a young girl was serving as the winning pitcher on an otherwise all-boy softball team, beating the boy's team from the rival town. I'm glad I look like her more and more, laugh like her, and have her dry sense of humor. One could do much worse then step into the shoes of my Mom.
