“ To the grandmother whose birthday gave me my name. My fondest memory is calling you on our birthday and singing you happy birthday. You giggled and said "happy birthday to you too". Those years have long passed by. The last time I hugged you was over a year ago in your backyard. I remember traveling to your house as a child ... the long winding roads that made my belly flip all the way from Texas to Missouri. I saw snow for the first time in your back yard. You were always cooking or snapping greenbeans, shucking corn and canning. You always smelled like the basement where you created your magic. We didn't talk much, but your eyes spoke volumes. I am thankful to you for the lineage of my life, my children's and their future children. This life was hard and now I truly wish you peace full of eternal joy.
