“ Cookie, Karen, David, Danny, Sandra, Don and families,

Losing your mother is a pain like no other, and grief is like glitter, you can throw a handful of it up in the air, but when you try to clean it up, you will never get it all. Long after her absence, you will still find glitter tucked in the corners. It will always be there..... somewhere. As you pause to remember her, reflect on her goodness, because that same goodness radiates through you to all who know you. How lucky are you to have known someone that is so hard to say goodbye to? That is love. Grief is an exponential expression of love. It's all the words you would like to say but no longer can. All that unspent adoration gathers and stings the corners of your eyes, messes up your mascara (for you girls) , and tickles your upper lip. It's your gasp for breath when you are reminded of her absence. Grief is just love with no place to go.

Know that I wish I were nearer to you to give you a big hug and support you in any way possible.....until I see you again, I am sending you virtual hugs.
